

FCC re: 17-108

The proposed roll-back of “net-neutrality” by removing providers from Title II rules will not increase competition and thus has no hope of increasing user satisfaction with the existing internet service providers. The FCC is a regulatory agency and should only regulate communications (a public commons) services to satisfy the end-users requirements, not the profitability of the regulated industry.